Characterization of the self-healing behavior of a monolithic metal-organic framework thin film deposited by atomic layer deposition. Atomic layer deposition (ALD) is one of the most promising technologies for the deposition of transparent thin films because of its conformal growth. We demonstrate, for the first time, that a monolithic copper-zirconium terephthalate (Cu-ZrTEP) thin film can be selectively deposited by ALD in a film-on-glass system to obtain an optically transparent, self-healing MOF thin film with fully exposed reactive carboxylate linkers on a glass substrate.

Image caption The latest salmonella outbreak is linked to bacon products sold at a branch of Tesco in Liverpool. A further seven people have died of a salmonella poisoning outbreak linked to pork products at a Tesco store. Six people have died and 52 people have been infected since a salmonella outbreak was first identified at a branch in Liverpool. In a statement, Tesco said the meat had come from two London-based suppliers. Officials said the salmonella outbreak was at the "very early stages" and there was no danger to people's health. The strain of the Salmonella bacteria involved in the current outbreak is not one that is normally found in pork. Tesco said people who bought pork products from the relevant date range were advised to discard them and check for signs of spoilage. In a statement, the Department of Health said: "If you have purchased or consumed Pork from one of the two London-based suppliers [of the relevant date range] between July 14 and 19, and are concerned about your health you should inform your
