We'll be sure to post the full list when the full award ceremony has been streamed (at the time of this post, we don't know when that'll be), but in the meantime, let's take a look back at some of the results. For Famitsu readers, one of the great awards ceremonies in gaming is the Famitsu Awards. It has long been used as a way to honor developers and franchises that excel at making titles, and this year was no different. The winners were announced live over two hours on YouTube. The full list of winners is below (with a note on the changes in the original announcement). As always, we'll add in any add on categories as soon as they're added to the list as well. Sophie Durocher reports. For the first time ever, archaeologists are digging beneath the surface of Ottawa. Story continues below

Tantalizing discoveries have been made. In 2011, work crews were taking test digs near the area of Bayview Drive and Higgs Road. Ever since, the Ottawa Archaeology Research Team (OART) has been patiently waiting for the government to actually launch the first phase of the Ottawa Archaeology Study project, which is a multi-year project on the capital's ancient past. "I just looked around, and when I saw this I was like, well, what can we do with this?" said Christine DiBlase of OART, as she reflected on the size of the hole. "This is very valuable land. Land that's been here for a very long time. It's important, absolutely. And as anyone can see, it's the beginning of the main road through this area." OART has been seeking public interest for the archaeological study, which would reveal more about the city's past. "Everyone should take an interest in [digs]," said DiBlase. "It's a lot more than just looking at the top of the ground. We're digging. We're taking a huge step to learn about what's underneath us, why is this area here." Story continues below So far, 11 heritage properties have been identified, three of which have been affected. Six more have been proposed. And the team will be setting up temporary digs on a number of new sites. One of them, near Carling Avenue and Foulis Street, is a site where the archeological investigation will take on a new level. "This site has been used to process construction materials from the first 20 years of our history," said DiBlase. "Once it's 1678ea9f9e
